The Sport Resistant are more likely to be female and from households with low to medium incomes (under $70k per annum). This stems from their disdain for sport and perceptions of sport clubs being too competitive and exclusive (that you have to be good at sport). Their attitudes are likely to be shaped by their parents who also demonstrate more negative perceptions about sport clubs in terms of being too competitive, inflexible, expensive and time consuming.

The Sport Resistant simply don’t understand what other people get out of sports or physical activity and have little appreciation of the social benefits that other children usually value in sport. For them sport isn’t fun and is too competitive. As such, they strongly feel sport clubs are not for them and do not understand any benefits to joining a club.
This would be a very challenging segment to engage – in part as it would require a basic education campaign on the benefits of sports and even for some physical activity to personal health and well-being. These campaigns would need to target the segment themselves and their parents.

- There is very limited potential for bringing Sport Resistant into clubs and trying to do so would be a poor investment of limited resources.
- A less competitive ethos would help but typically these children and their parents are antithetical to sport and sport clubs.

What to talk to them about? (Products)

- Firstly, any marketing to this segment will require an education campaign on how sports can benefit them ... and will require education to their parents as well
- Initial focus on activities that are not competitive (can do by themselves)
- Opportunities to experience how exercise and sports can be enjoyable – with no pressure
- Beginner classes or classes that can encourage them to feel that sport is fun again

What to say? (Message areas)

- Physical activity / exercise / sports is for everyone
- Sport is fun and everyone can do it
- Sport helps you to make friends, feel good about yourself

How to say it? (Tone)

- Encouraging and reassuring
